Neonatal Clinical Nurse Specialist~
Inland NW
Regional Perinatal
Center, Spokane, WA

Maureen Shogan is an advanced practice nurse in Spokane, Washington who provides education, consultation and research related to care of the newborn. She has worked with chemically dependent pregnant women for the past 15 years.

Maureen is a graduate of Gonzaga University and received her masters in nursing from the Intercollegiate College of Nursing-WSU. She is published in numerous nursing journals and was a member of the Washington State Department of Health Advisory Work Group that designed "Substance Abuse During Pregnancy: Guidelines for Screening" for care providers.

She was instrumental in the development and now chairs the Spokane County Child Protection Team that meets weekly for case consultation for prenatally exposed newborns. Maureen enthusiastically gives creative, energetic, and thought provoking workshops throughout the United States.

Course Objectives:

- * Identify the prevalence of drugs/alcohol used by pregnant women
- * List the common terms & methods of use for drugs and impact on Inland Northwest communities
- * Describe possible maternal behaviors displayed during use of drugs and alcohol
- * Describe initial nursing assessment that may lead to identification of maternal prenatal drug use
- * Describe effective interview techniques utilized to elicit maternal history of prenatal drug/alcohol use
- * Discuss possible calming interventions for the neonate exposed prenatally to drugs
- * Describe possible effects of alcohol, methamphetamine, marijuana, cocaine, narcotics and ecstasy on the fetus/newborn
- * Describe community resources available to families with substance abuse and mental health issues

Program Highlights:

- Answers to Anything You Wanted to Know on Street Drugs. How Prevalent Are They?
- Effects of drug use on the Fetus/Newborn Exposed to Drugs in Pregnancy
- Quarrying in the Quagmire of Perinatal Drug Use: Interviewing Techniques that Elicit Factual Maternal Drug/Alcohol History
